

ENOCH J. FOX HOUSE (J. PHIPPS SITE)

Delaware Ave. has a fine collection of 19th century and Early 20th century residences which can teach us a great deal about Victorian Towson. This small frame house is one of the last in the neighborhood still being used as a residence. Enoch J. Fox has it built earlier in this century to replace a log house which is believed to have been built prior to 1877. Evidence of the log house survives beneath the frame structure and thus in a single building one can see an evolution of wood construction techniques.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Irene C. Fox residence, located on 506 Delaware Ave., is a rectilinear frame house on a longitudinal plan. It has a gable end roof, with very deep cornices on the west and east ends of the building.

The west or street facade is two bays wide with a single story gable roof porch, the porch having wooden verandahs towards the southwest corner of the house. On the north side of the west facade there is a wooden glass entrance door which suggests a side hall plan and towards the southwest is a 1/1 double hung window with louvered shutters and on the attic there is a double hung window.

On the south side, on both stories, there are five double hung windows, three on a swell-front two story bay window, which allows more light into the living room area. On the north side there are two 1/1 double hung windows.

The east end of the house has a wooden glass door with a gable roof hood over it and on the second story there is a 1/1 double hung window. The east end contains the kitchen on the first floor and this portion of the building was where the original house started.

The 1877 and 1898 maps indicate a house on this lot which sits back from the road quite a bit further than the present structure. According to Mrs. Fox, her father tore down the log house which stood where the present kitchen is located and replaced it with this frame dwelling. An opening in the east wall of the basement allows one to look under the kitchen where foundation logs can still be seen. One of them on the north side still contains remainents of a log wall that had been squared and V- notched.

The hall is on the north side of the building. On the first floor, one finds the living room which is well lighted due to the swell-front window. The door frames all over the house are decorated with natural wood and bull eye cornices.

To the east of the dining room one finds the kitchen. The kitchen is a complete reminder of the past with an early 2-th century gas stove and a tall cupboard with tongue groove panelling. It is quite a contrast for one to look outside the window or door and can see a vista of the new and modern Towson.

On the patio behind the kitchen there is a board and batten wooden tool shed which might have been constructed with the wood from the old house (dating back to the 19th century and the new house early 20th century). This is evidenced by the glass on the window and the wooden pegs on the corner of the window frame and square cut nails on the southeast section of the shed.
